EMPHASIS

It is important to pay attention to each area of a room. Using furniture, backgrounds, and colors we emphasize the areas we want to emphasize. It is important to assess the natural room's condition before considering which areas should be downplayed. If there are French doors leading to a veranda where the Sun meets the horizon at dusk, these are features you should highlight. In our approach to the other areas of the room, we use subtlety to emphasize the eye-catching dominant level.

In addition, we use simple, neutral furnishings elsewhere to prevent distracting the occupant from the chosen feature. The presence of too many items is therefore very disorienting, confusing, and disturbing.
